FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Become a Certified Community Conversations Facilitator with Colorado Humanities

Colorado Humanities is hosting a Facilitator Training on November 5 and 6 from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. in Denver for individuals interested in facilitating community conversations.

This training prepares people to plan and facilitate conversations about vital issues and questions across different beliefs and backgrounds. These conversations help build understanding and strengthen relationships within organizations and communities. Coloradans who complete the training will be certified to facilitate community conversations with our organization throughout the state. Conversation topics explored in the training include race and ethnicity, dying and grief, war and veteran experience, and change in rural Colorado. This two-day training is priced at $300 per participant.

During the training you will

- learn about facilitation and reflective conversation
- have an opportunity to practice new skills and techniques
- reflect on and share your own beliefs and assumptions and listen to beliefs, backgrounds, and experiences different than your own
- design and participate in reflective conversations with debriefs that analyze facilitation tools and choices.

You will leave feeling more confident and equipped to

- observe and respond to group dynamics
- design and facilitate a conversation that allows people and groups to learn more deeply about themselves and each other
- use our framework and tools to facilitate a reflective conversation at your workplace or in your community work.
